I. PROTECTING WHISTLEBLOWERS

The decision to report must be made consciously, thoughtfully and honestly, and presupposes good faith on the part of the Whistleblower.

Protection is only afforded to whistleblowers who report in good faith and have serious grounds for believing that the information reported is true at the time the complaint is lodged.

The protection of:

- Natural person who assists the whistleblower in the whistleblowing procedure and whose assistance must be confidential, including trade union representatives or workers' representatives;
- A third party who is linked to the whistleblower, such as a work colleague or family member, and could be the target of retaliation in a professional context; and
- Legal persons or similar entities that are owned or controlled by the whistleblower, for which the whistleblower works or with which they are in any way connected in a professional context.

It should be emphasised that anyone who intentionally makes a false report or fakes indications or evidence in order to launch an internal investigation, especially with the intention of harming someone, is acting in bad faith and is therefore not protected by this procedure, and may be held disciplinary, criminal and civilly liable for their conduct.

The company ensures the protection of whistleblowers by enshrining measures which, if violated, could, in addition to the liability provided for by law, lead to civil liability and the obligation to pay compensation for the damage caused.

All forms of retaliation are prohibited, whether overt or subtle, such as sanctions, acts of harassment or discrimination, whether direct or indirect. Therefore, with the aim of helping to understand and identify situations that may represent retaliation, some examples are given of acts that, if they occur within two years of the complaint being lodged, could constitute retaliation:

- a) Changes in working conditions, such as duties, working hours, place of work or pay, failure to promote the employee or failure to fulfil labour duties;
- b) Suspension of employment contract;
- c) Negative performance evaluation or negative reference for employment purposes;
- d) Non-conversion of a fixed-term labour contract into an open-ended contract, whenever the worker had legitimate expectations of such conversion;
- e) Non-renewal of a fixed-term employment contract;
- f) Dismissal;
- g) Inclusion on a list, based on a sector-wide agreement, which could lead to the whistleblower being unable to find employment in the sector or industry concerned in the future; and
- h) Termination of a supply or service contract.
- i) Any disciplinary sanction applied to the whistleblower or by a co-worker of the whistleblower who assists him/her in the whistleblowing procedure up to two years after the whistleblowing or its public disclosure is presumed to be abusive.
